

Photo of Dunipace Brooch © Scotlandsimages.com
Used with Permission.

The silver & amber Celtic Dunipace Brooch (photo to the left, courtesy of ScotlandsImages.com) is from the 8th century AD and was discovered near the Hills of Dunipace, circa 1800s. It resides now in the Museum of Scotland. In 1975 a local history lover, Walter Gardiner, had a replica of the brooch (photo above, lower item with amber stones) created by a silver smith in Creetown for Mrs. Gardiner on the occasion of their Silver Wedding Anniversary (from a photograph, courtesy of the museum). David Loney's photo of that replica is courtesy of his daughter, Mary Baxter. The other brooches on this page were inherited from her maternal grandfather, George Murdoch. One is from the first Denny & Dunipace Pipe Band, circa 1930s.

The 1935 Silver Jubilee coin was found in 2004 on Wellsfield Farm and lent to us by Tony Harris for a photo session with David Loney as well; additional photo provided by Christine Bell.

Relics and Artefacts of Dunipace & Denny
Part of the joy of living in an historic area is that every now and then someone unearths—literally—a bit of ancient buried treasure.